The land forces were moved up to within a mile of the stronghold encircling it around. And now began a course of action which has been repeated over and over again along the coast of South China. A Westerner looking on would at once conclude that a simultaneous attack from all sides was about to be made, and the little fort, with its defenders, crushed and annihi lated at a blow. No such prompt and dashing measures are dreamed of. It would be contrary to all precedent to finish the business so summarily. Slow but sure is the course they take. Earthworks are thrown up, and preparations made for a long siege. The country people look on in dismay as it dawns upon them that they have these five thousand soldiers quartered on them for an indefinite period. They indulge tirioner at Shanghai. murder are their trade. Two of them could chase a hundred soldiers.' Meanwhile let us look at the two bands i that face each other. The pirates are well known. They are inured to hardship and accustomed to danger of every kind. They number three hundred and can count upon every man when it comes to the test. They are comparatively well armed and fight for life and liberty. They have a terrible name and even in the distance inspire fear. They may be depended upon to fight and die Turn now to the besieging army. Walk about among those five thousand troops as they lie encamped behind their earthworks and note their discipline and equipment. Where are the officers who should be drilling their troops and observing strict military discipline? In their quarters smoking opium or gambling. They know nothing of military tactics and are the first to run away in battle. The army is simply a rabproper head to d rect them. Chines 1 10!diers and sailors are often accused of cowardice. Such a charge when made against them as a whole is not true. Under proper sed of high courage and true bravery. The trouble usually is that they have poor discipline, worthless officers and no proper arms. Among the fire thousand men gathered before that little fort, not more than two hundred have any fire-arm at all, and With what then are they armed? is the

I immediate question that comes up. The average outfit of a Chinese spidler, not in the present case alone, but usually, consists of the clothes he has on, a blanket, a and a fart. Few of them are found without the two latter articles. Fancy, an army left to provide shelter for themselves as
